Police Question Winnie Mandela

SOWETO, South Africa (Reuters) — Winnie Mandela, the wife of the jailed South African black nationalist leader Nelson Mandela, was held by police for questioning Sunday but was released later, her lawyer said. A police spokesman said that Mrs. Mandela had not been arrested or detained.

Her lawyer, Ismail Ayob, said that police had searched Mrs. Mandela's home near Johannesburg for more than two hours before taking her to Soweto's main police station, then returned to get her daughter, Zindzi, and a filing cabinet containing personal papers.

University Classes Are Suspended to Protest Abduction

By Nora Boustany Washington Post Service BEIRUT - With four professors - three of them Americans and the fourth an Indian-born U.S. resident - having been kidnapped Saturday, Beirut University College suspended classes indefinitely Sunday to protest the abductions. Students and teachers called on all educational institutions here to shut their doors in solidarity. The four were identified as Alann Steen, 46, professor of jour-nalism; Jesse Turner, assistant pro-

Wall Street Swing Worries SEC

New York Times Service NEW YORK --- Wall Street's wild ride on Friday, in which the Dow Jones industrial average zig-zagged 200 points in two and a half hours, has stunned investors and prompted the U.S. government to examine more closely market vola-tility and the role of computers.

John S. R. Shad, chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission, said Friday that the agency was concerned about increasing volatility on U.S. securities markets and was examining ways to damp-

"The commission is definitely looking at this situation," Mr. Shad said in Washington. The Dow average of 30 industrial stocks soared 64 points by early Friday afternoon - its largest oneday point gain - then dived about 115 points in just over an hour. Mr. Shad said the fall represented a five-percent swing, considerably larger than the market has seen in recent years.

Before the afternoon was over. the blue-chip average gained an- calculations are extremely comother 50 points, then plunged again to end down 44.15 points, at 2,101.52. Trading volume on the New York Stock Exchange came to 302 million shares, a record. Analysts attributed the volatility not to worries about the U.S. economy — the traditional explanation for Wall Street's moodiness — but to the practice of arbitraging, or rapid buying and selling on a number of markets to take advantage of differences in prices between those markets. This type of trading is made possible by new computer technologies that enable big investors to play one market against another andrapidly move huge amounts of funds A main reason for the swings involved large investors who were

Because these practices carry little risk and can be enormously profitable, investors are willing to put up huge sums. The amount of money they invest, in turn, can pull the market up quickly or push it down just as fast.

In addition, analysts cited the dominance of program trading in financial markets. Most institutional traders - the big players on the stock market --- use computer programs that issue automatic "buy" and "sell" orders when the Dow or other primary stock averages have risen or fallen a certain number of points. These programs accentuate trends already in evidence, creating periods of near panic buying and selling.

Yet, the chancellor's Christian Democrats did considerably less partners. A two-tiered voting syswell than opinion polls had forecast, winning only 44 percent of the popular vote compared to 48.8 percent in the 1983 national election. The dismal performance, the party's worst since the founding of the Federal Republic in 1949, appeared likely to weaken Mr. Kohl's personal authority within a traditionally fractious coalition. The big winners of the election were West Germany's two small parties - the centrist Free Democrats, junior partners in the coalition, and the Greens, who oppose membership in the North Atlantie Treaty Organization, The Free Democrats raised their share of the vote from 7 percent in 1983 to 8.8 percent, while the Greens jumped to 8.2 percent from 6 percent, the projections by telesion stations showed.

The left-of-center Social Democrats did marginally better than most opinion polls had forecast and almost equaled their 1983 showing, drawing 37.6 percent compared to 38.2 percent four years ago, according to the projec-tions. That result had been the party's worst since 1961. Although the performance was well short of the Social Democrats'

Mr. Strauss, 71, was known to have aspirations to displace Mr. Genscher as foreign minister, but the strong showing by the Free Democrats appeared to guarantee that Mr. Genscher will remain in his post.

From comments by its leaders Sunday night, the Free Democratic Party, which draws its support from small businessmen and professionals, expects to increase its overall weight within the coalition. china Party Expels eading Journalist Known for Exposés

By Edward A. Gargan New York Times Service BELJING - The Chinese Communist Party has expelled a prominent journalist known for his scathing attacks on corruption in party TROKS

As the campaign against intellectual dissidence accelerated, it was disclosed Saturday that Liu Binyan, a muckraking reporter for People's Daily whose writing is often seared with a novelist's passion, became the third prominent intellectual to be purged from the party in the political upheaval that has unscated Hu Yaobang, formerly the leader of the party.

Mr. Lin and two other leading intellectuals, Fang Lizhi and Wang Rnowang, were denounced by Deng Xiaoping, China's leader, on Jan. 13 during a meeting with a visiting Japanese official. Mr. Fang a university vice president, and Mr. Wang a Shanghai writer, have since been expelled from the

Mr. Liu is a vice chairman of the Chinese Writers' Association. He became something of a folk hero to millions of Chinese for his exposes of greed and corruption in the

The agency reported that he "made speeches and wrote articles on many occasions in violation of the party constitution, discipline and resolutions."

He was also charged with criticizing a set of ideological precepts that declare inviolable the primacy of the Communist Party, the adherence to socialism, the permanence cific accusation against Mr. Mac-of the "people's democratic dicta- Donald, but a Western diplomat torship," and the dominance of said the tough phrasing of the re-Marxism, Leninism and the port indicated that the Chinese anthought of Mao Zedong.

"He also vilified the Com Party as "having degenerated," " the agency said. "Lin gravely violated the journalistic principle of respecting facts and cross-checking to make facts accurate. Liu even went so far as to fabricate facts to attack the party and confound readers unaware of the truth."

In one of his most celebrated investigations, Mr. Lin uncovered a network of bribery and influencepeddling run by a party secretary in Manchuria. The secretary, Wang Shouxin, was found to have embezzled large sums of money. At the time, party officials linked to Mr. Wang accused Mr. Lin of

Pakistan Asks for Talks On Border Alert by India

Agence France-Presse ISLAMABAD, Pakistan -Prime Minister Mohammed Khan Juncjo called Sunday for negotiations with India to avert what he termed "unimaginable destruc-tion" in the region that might arise from the increase in border tension in the last week.

The prime minister, addressing an emergency session of the legisla-ture to discuss the situation, said that Pakistan had taken "appropriate measures" after India scaled its border in the northern state of Punjab, adjoining Pakistan, and placed its forces on alert to counter Paki-

Police said they seized four docu-ments during the search and talked with Duncan Campbell, the journalist who wrote the article.

India has pledged not to attack Pakistan and said it wanted talks with its neighbor to reduce the tension caused by troop movements on both sides.

India said Friday that its army and air force had been put on maximum alert in response to what it called a Pakistani buildup on the Puniah border.

"I would like categorically to state that there is no question of India attacking Pakistan," an Indian spokesman said Saturday night. The level, venue and timing of such talks are to be settled through diplomatic channels." The spokesman said that Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi spoke with the Pakistani ambassador to India, Humayun Khan, on Friday and had offered to hold negotiations to

"de-escalate" the situation. Mr. Khan said be was seeking immediate consultations on the matter. Late Saturday, Mr. Gandhi ap-pointed Vishwanath Pratap Singh, his finance minister and a close aide, to take charge of the Defense

Japan Drops Cap on Military Budget

TOKYO (NYT) - Japan has formally dropped a policy that had put a cap on yearly increases in military spending. But it coupled the action, with a promise to stay "a peace-loving nation." A government statement said Saturday, "The fundamental defense concept of Japan under its Peace Constitution is to maintain an exclusive.

y defensive posture and not to become a military power that presents : kreat to other nations."

The statement was intended to deflect criticism as Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone's cabinet did away with a decade-old requirement that had confined the annual military budget to less than 1 percent of the Japanese gross national product. The policy, established in 1976, was breached for the first time last month when the government approved a $23 billion military budget for 1987, equivalent to 1.004 percent of projections for the GNP, which measures the total value of a nation's goods and services.

Hospitalized CIA Chief Expected to Quit Soon

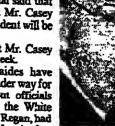

Washington Post Service

Washington Past Same WASHINGTON — William J. Cascy, the director of the Central Intelligence Agency, who is recuperating after the removal of a cancerous brain tumor, will "resign soon," according to a Republican source close to the Reagan administration. The source said Mr. Casey, 73, would return home from George-town University Hospital this week and soon afterward offer his resignation to President Ronald Reagan.

Mr. Casey is a close friend and confident of Mr. Reagan and served as manager of his 1980 presidential campaign. A senior White House official said that he was "aware of reports that Mr. Casey may resign" and that "the president will be guided by his wishes."

The CIA denied Friday that Mr. Casey would resign as early as this week. Officially, White House aides have maintained that no search is under way for a successor to Mr. Casey. But officials acknowledged last week that the White House chief of staff, Donald T. Regan, had talked with Howard H. Baker Jr., the former Senate Republican leader from Ten-William J. Casey

prochement with Iran last year."

United Press International

According to sources, Mr. Baker insisted that the request be made by the president rather than by Mr. Regan. These sources said that Mr. Regan, either through a misunderstanding or deliberately, then told the president that Mr. Baker was not interested in the job. Mr. Reagan then called Mr. Baker and told him he was sorry he was not interested in the job, the sources said. The source who said that Mr. Casey would resign soon identified three potential replacements: William H. Webster, the director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation; Senator Malcolm Wallop, Republican of Wyoming; and John G. Tower, former Republican senator of Texas.

Other sources said, however, that possible successors included Robert M. Gates, who is acting CIA director in Mr. Casey's absence, and Brent Scowcroft, who served as national security adviser to President Gerald R. Ford.

Hostages Were Reagan's Main Concern, North Said By Walter Pincus and Bill Peterson Washington Past Service WASHINGTON — Lieutenant By Lou Cannon

Colonel Oliver L. North said in November that President Ronald Reagan's primary interest in ap-proving an initiative to Iran that included secret arms sales was freeing U.S. hostages in Lebanon, according to notes held by the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence.

Colonel North said that wheneyer be or Robert C. McFarlane, a former former national security adviser, tried to talk to Mr. Reagan about the geopolitical aspects of the arms sales, such as the broader goal of reaching moderates in the Iranian government, "the president would steer the conversation to the hostages," a source familiar with the extensive notes said Saturday. Colonel North's comments were made during a Nov. 22 interview with Attorney General Edwin Meese 3d, from which the notes were made. "I would say we have to view this in a geopolitical context and the president would keep coming back to the hostages," the source quoted

Colonel North as saying to Mr. Meese. "No matter what we did," the former National Security Council

State of the President

What is new is not the state of the Union but the state of the president. Starting suddenly, on successive days last November, the Reagan administration changed. Six years of genial invincibility have faded fast, and that is why the president's report to Congress on Tuesday ranks in importance with his first one. It will show whether Ronald Reagan, whose resilience has been so often underestimated, can bounce back once again. The chances are strong that he cannot, at least not all the way.

Last Nov. 3 brought one reason: the first disclosure of the Iran-contra scandal. Then Nov. 4 inflicted a different wound: loss of the Senate to the Democrats. There are other reasons, too. As time passes, loyal aides trail away, leaving third-stringers in their place. For all Mr. Reagan's vigor, age and bospitalizations cannot help eventually affecting acuity. Still, that his administration is weaker does not mean it is helpless or inert. Freedom is a good horse, Matthew Arnold wrote, but a horse to ride somewhere. The measure of the president's speech is where he wants to ride.

There is no end of important goals, like a credible ano-terror policy, a constant pol-icy on drugs, insuring against catastrophie medical expenses. This speech will lay out the agenda for the rest of the Reagan presidency. If he means to be taken seriously, five subjects loom largest.

Peace. The first priority is arms control. At Reykjavik, negotiating progress was de-railed into a train wreck of confusions. Still, this remains a rare moment. The Soviet leader seems eager to deal. The window of vulnerability now looks like a window of opportunity, if only the president will see the opening. Likewise, there is no way to tell if negotiation is possible in Central America without giving it a serious try. Fiscal fidelity. The national debt now tops $2 trillion, double the pre-Reagan total, How much is e trillioo? Just counting to e trillion, one number per second, would take 32,000 years. The president cannot raise defense spending, cut the deficit and forbid ocw taxes any more this year than he could in 1981. The besetting error all along has been to believe him when he says be hates deficits. If he did, a president with such popularity and power would, over six years, have done something about it.

This deficit is oo despised orphan, ft is President Reagan's child, and secretly he loves it, as David Stockman has explained: The deficit rigorously discourages any idea of spending another dime for social welfare. But that tower of debt, along with its twin tower, the trade deficit, now cast ever darker shadows. To dare Congress to raise reve-oues is not leadership; it is playing chicken with our children's money.

Protecting against protectionism. The steel worker who has lost his job because of imports grasps for the most obvious reme dy: ban imports. What be cannot be expect-ed to remember is that trade barriers cost more jobs and more dollars than they save. Protectionists can be as powerful as they are mistaken, however, and Mr. Reagan will be judged by how imaginatively and stub-bornly he protects against them.

The family. A Republican named Eisenhower championed disability insurance, and a Republican named Nixon championed food stamps. If President Reagan is serious about welfare and family policy, he could now champion the cause of poor children - whose numbers have risen in his presidency from 11.5 million to 12.8 million. Senator Daniel P. Moynihan, a New York Democrat, calculates that the poverty rate among young children is seven times that among the elderly. Reaganites are the first to declaim that the system of Aid to Families with Dependent Children does oot work. But beyond denouncing "welfare queens," all the administration offers is two recent interagency committee reports calling on the federal government to do less. Race. In this time of rising turbulence, constructive signals are needed as urgently as constructive programs. Consider the signals Mr. Reagan has sent, from a black point of view, ever since he began his 1980 campaign — in Philadelphia, Mississippi, notorious for three Klan killings in 1964. His administration has argued that segre-gated academies are enotied to tax exemptions. It bitterly resists affirmative action. The president has yet to meet with the sional black cancus. CONSTE

By his choices on Tuesday, President Reagan will show whether he is tired, merely battening down to protect past achievements, or whether he still wants to ride somewhere. By his speech he will tell how he means to he remembered: as a partisan who succeeded as president of the right, or as president of all the people.

Stand Up to Terrorism

With the kidnapping of two German hos-tages in Beirut, West Germany's handling of the Hamadei case has gone into slow gear. One immediate reason has been the national election; reasonably enough, the government wanted to avoid anything that might have a last-minute impact on the voting. Beyond that, the legal situation is oot simple, Mohammed Ali Hamadei was arrested at Frankfurt airport carrying explosives. The United States has charged that he is one of the two terrorists who hijacked a TWA airliner in June 1985 and murdered an American passenger, a young navy diver. The Germ ins will have to de cide where he is to be tried first, for what, and whether to extradite him. But over all the legal technicalities hangs a familiar and tormenting political quesoon. Will the government proceed with the prosecution or extradition of the suspect, when his friends in Beirut threaten to retaliate by murdering a hostage? Or will it begin reluctantly to consider trading a man accused of murder for the bostages? In principle it is absolutely clear that a government can never afford to cave in to that kind of threat. The supply of hostages is endless in a world where people travel widely, and to give in merely makes certain types of crime unpunishable and laws against terrorist violence unenforceable. But governments, swayed by pleas from hostages' families and friends, and fearing, blame for another death in Beirut, sometimes find it expedient to waffle and surrender. The Germans are justified in observing that the Reagan administration, in the Iran fiasco, has set the world no very inspiring example of courage and rigor in dealing with terrorists who hold hostages. A better example was established by Bonn itself in the 1970s. A decade ago the Social Democratic government under Helmut Schmidt sent West German commandos to recapture a Lufthansa airliner that

Angola: 'Mutual Interests' With the United States

By Flora Lewis

C ABINDA, Angola — Deputy Foreign Minister Venancin de Moura felt the urge to address the men having lunch in the mess hall. He introduced Representative Mickey Leland, a Democrat from Houston. He said be wanted to explain wby "Americans should be welcomed as friends although Angola has no dip-lomatic relations with the U.S. and Washington is helping the armed bandits." That was a reference to Jonas Savimbi's South African-sup-ported UNITA rebels.

Still, it was unlikely that anybody there wondered about the American visitors. The hall is part of the huge Cabinda Gulf Oil camp, Angola's major petroleum producer and thus its major export earner. Cabinda is an enclave, cut off from the rest of Angola by a sliver of Zaire. Within it the camp is almost completely isolated. It could be a self-cootained island. Of the 1,500 people who work there, a little over e third are foreigners who seldom set foot elsewhere in Africa except to catch a plane home. The Americans spend 28 days on the job and then have 28 days to commute to Texas, Oklahoma or wherever home is, the routine for oilmen abroad.

closed oil society, learning from the foreign experts with the prospect of eventually moving up to managerial responsibilities. The profits and exresponsionmes. The profits and ex-penses are split 51 percent for Ango-la, 49 percent for Chevron, the parent company, and it has been highly sat-isfactory for both through revolution, war and East-West bostility. The real anomaly is oot even oticeable at the camp and is seldom mentioned. Cuban troops aiding Marxist Angola, some 30,000 in the huge country altogether, protect the enclave. In May 1985 a South African commando unit landed with the aim of blowing up oil storage tanks. They carried UNITA propaganda leaflets to leave behind, so that it would appear that Mr. Savimbi's men had carried out the raid. But they were detected and the plot was exposed.

Wayne Johansen, who manages the camp, said he worried more about security when be went through European airports on his monthly commute to Houston than he did in Cabinda. Company policy, which he does his best to observe, is to keep

The official U.S. stand is that some south. But they, too, are part of the arms for Mr. Savimbi's rebels, called "freedom fighters" in Reaganese, will induce Angola to send home Cuban troops and Soviet military advisers, open oegotiations for a power-sharing deal with UNITA and move away from ties with Moscow. In fact, it associates the United States with

South Africa in African eyes. To say that it is hard to make sense of the policy is an understatement. In a special report on Angola recently, the London-based Economist Intelligence Unit said that American aid would not make a real military difference. European diplomats and Western observers here agree.

The endless Angolan civil war is at a stalemate prolonged by outsiders. As long as the Soviet Union and Cuba maintain their commitment to the government, UNITA cannot impose itself. Its main base is the Ovimbundu tribe in the southeast and it has little appeal to others, although it can stage incursions and disrupt the economy in much of the country. As long as South Africa stands behind UNITA, the government cannot clear out the rebels and get on with development of this underpopulated (eight million) and potentially very rich country twice the size of France. Nine-tenths of the country is considered unsecured. The main victims of the war are civilians, who suffer directly and indirectly through hunger, lack of jobs and economic near paralysis. Unlike Mozambique, the other big former Portuguese colony in southern Africa. Angola has not inoved much from its pro-Soviet po-sition and Marxist orthodoxy in the direction of pragmatic reforms.

Still, it is evident that it would like to have relations with the United States and Western investments be-yond the oil fields. The Cubans have become a chicken-and-egg proposi-tion, with Angola saying that they will be sent home when security permits and the United States insisting on their departure as a first step. So Mr. de Moura's speech to the oil workers about "friendship with the American people" and "mutual inter-ests" with the United States was really an appeal. The appeal should be heeded, oot just for the sake of oil and trade but because the war will not settle the U.S.-Soviet rivalry that rages above people's heads here. Peace, which the nation desperately oceds, would make it easier,

Pealer High Time For Brandt To Let Go

By Jim Hoagland

BONN - Few outsiders view As the famous line about the Germans being "either at your throat or ... your feet" suggests, many Americans " think in extremes, and with distrust, about this country that America has fought twice in this century. The Germans are either about to wander out of NATO and do their own pacifist deal with the Russians, or are secretly forming new storm is trooper units for a right-wing putch. If depending on which paper you read or which Washington official you catch in unguarded conversation.

It is time to revise such exaggerated and emotional thinking about post-war German society, which has actually succeeded beyond expectations in developing consensus at the center and containing its extremists on the fringes. The just completed national campaign for the Bundestag provides the perfect moment to do so.

the perfect moment to do so. For the campaign demonstrated the extent to which once divisive questions have been worked out at the center. The most striking absorp-tion is of Ostpolitik, which was pio-neered by Willy Brandt and has now. become a factor of cohesion for West; Germany. Helmut Kohl built part of his re-election campaign around the ides that the German right can carry a out dialogue with the Soviet bloc even more effectively than could Mr.

Brandt's Social Democrats. But if part of the story of this year's . elections is about the success of Mr. Brandt's early ideas, another part of it concerns his failure in the 1980s to stay in tune with the electorate. As he bas moved further left in a search for" a new, improved Ostpolitik, the elec-" torate has moved to the right, e trend that the SPD acknowledged by nominating Johannes Rau, a leading SPD' moderate, to try to unseat Mr. Kohl, "We have shown that we walk on " two legs, defense and dialogue, Volker Rühe, a Bundestag deputy who is one of the chief foreign policy strategists for Mr. Kohl's Christian Democratic Union, noted in the closing days of the campaign when asked: about Ostpolitik moving into the mainstream. "In fact the CDU has" more room of maneuver on German-German matters and on Ostpolitik 27 than does the SPD."

The SPD calculation was that we could handle relations with the United States and the West, but not with . the East," Mr. Rühe contioued. "They were wrong. And the SPD has given voters the impression that it wants dialogue instead of defense." Mr. Brandt brought Ostpolitik to life when he became chancellor in 1969 and launched the SPD on its 13-. year domination of West German politics. terrorists had seized and landed in Somalia. That government also refused to negotiate with the West German terrorist organization that kidnapped and subsequently killed a prominent industrialist. While terrorism has not entirely disappeared in Ger-many, Mr. Schmidt's decision in that case was crucial in breaking the momentum of the violent political movement that had sprung up there. Helmnt Kohl now has an opportunity to do as much - not for the United States, but for Germans like the Beirut hostages who travel abroad and are entitled to do it free of fear of capture by terrorists who need pawns to trade. -THE WASHINGTON POST.

Defense Centers Hold

In two very different and important nations, there is a discernible shift away from the long-held belief that voters are allergic to any increase in nonnuclear defense spending. On Friday Japan agreed to end a decade-old policy of keeping military ex-penditures below 1 percent of gross naconal product. And io Britain the opposition Labor Party finds it expedient to proclaim the need to strengthen NATO's conven-oonal forces. This is a welcome shift, although the new Laborite gift horse comes with a mouthful of old teeth.

Japan's distaste for military spending goes back in defeat in World War II, to e resulting constitution that restricts spend-ing to "self-defense forces" and to a resur-gence of pacifism during the Vietnam War. In 1976 Japan decided "for the time being" to limit military spending to 1 percent of annual output in goods and services. The distress in Washington that followed was ameliorated by creative juggling of accounts that enabled Japan to claim compliance while contributing a bit more. As a practical matter, the United States has reason to cheer the end of the 1 percent dogma, especially since the 1987 allocation of $23 billion - which is 1.004 percent of projected GNP - includes cost-sharing provisions fnr American forces stadoned in Japan. Washington rightly pushed for more from Tokyo in the common defense but not so hard as to trigger a resurgence of Japanese militarism.

The Laborite shift in Britain was anoounced in e new policy statement reaffirming the party's opposition to a $15 billion program for replacing ballistic-mis-sile Polaris submarines with more up-todate Trident submarines. But for the first time the party declares that it will spend money saved on strengthening NATO's conventional forces. And the statement, "Modern Britain in a Modern World," barely refers to the party's earlier demand. for closing down American nuclear weapon installations in Britain.

What has happened is not so much a change of heart as of wind. Heading into a vote this year or early next year, Labor's leader, Neil Kinnock, is finding a responsive audience when he attacks the Conservaove government's economic failures. However, polls show that Britons are dubious about Mr. Kinnock's proposal to pull down the nuclear umbrella, in the form of American bases and the British deterrent. Defense is Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's potential trump, as Mr. Kinnock finally seems to grasp. He appears to be scrambling toward the center nn security issues; he has a long way to go. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

In Russia, glasnost - openness - is the word. In China, students have taken to the streets demanding democracy and have oot been met with glasnost. The supreme leader, Deng Xiao-ping, ordered the demonstrations halted. His Directive No. 1, a classic of velvet glove repres-sion, reads: "We can afford to shed some blood. Just try as much as possible not to kill anyone," China is in the grip of a crackdown. While Soviet intellectuals are encouraged to speak, Chinese intellectuals are warned to bold their tongues. And yet the only real hope lies in China.

The reason is to be found in something said by one of the three purged Chinese intellectuals, Fang Lizhi, a hero of the democracy movement who was fired from his university post: "Democracy granted from above is not democracy in a real sense. It is relaxation of control." Mikhail Gorbacheva is e revolution from above. He offers to relax control in order to anove the object of the second China's is a revolution from below, a brushfire most a decade old. But these have taken root in society and threaten to outgrow party control. First farmers are allowed to sell to market. Then factory managers are given control of their enterprises. Now students demand democracy.

Marx was right. It really is change from below - in material conditions, economics, social structure - that ultimately creates revolution. Mr. Deng started by introducing a hint of capi-talism. With Western-style economic liberty comes the hunger for Western-style political lib-erty. Thanks to Mr. Deng, China has incubated e democratic-capitalist revolution, 200 years late. China's system of socialism is "feudal or semi-feudal in essence," said the Marxist theorist

Wang Rnowang. (Saying so was one of "five major mistakes" for which he was purged, says Chinese television.) Add a bit of capitalism, and Marx prophesied, as did Mr. Deng's hard-line colleagues, precisely what comes next: "bour-geois liberalization," the demand for freedom.

China's curious time warp is reflected even in the poverty of the language of political dissent. The recent pro-democracy speech by Mr. Fang is as stumning for its anachronisms as for its cour-age. Mr. Fang declared that people "are born with rights." It was a discovery as touching in its

Yet the turmoil itself is reason for some hope. Mr. Gorbachev has his revolution firmly, de pressingly in control. He lights the fires. In the debate on the Strategic Defense Initiative we often hear it asked whether the SDI can be 100 percent effective, as if that were the only important point. What if the Soviet Union or the United States attained 50 percent effectiveness in an SDf system? Would thet be tantamount to a 50 percent reduction of the adversary's nuclear delivery capability?

Suppose both superpowers had SDf capabilities of less than 100 percent. Would that make an improvement of SD1 capability more attractive to each than an increase of its nuclear strike ability? TONDON - U.S. arms deliveries to Iran involved indirect cooperation between Sandi Arabia and Israel, according to an intermediary in the sales, Jacob Nimrodi. Mr. Nimrodi, an Israeli arms dealer and former intelligence agent, said that leaders in both countries believed that the operation offered an opportunity to bring Iran closer to the West

Mr. Nimrodi said that he and his partner, Al Schwimmer, founder of Israel Aircraft Industries, worked with Adnan M. Khashoggi, a ines, worked with Adnah M. Khashoggi, a Saudi businessman with close ties to the royal family of Saudi Arabia. "We had the impres-sion that Mr. Khashoggi was acting with the direct knowledge and approval of Fahd," he said, referring to King Fahd of Saudi Arabia. Mr. Nimrodi's version of events, provided in a recent interview, describes covert Middle Eastern alliances simed at containing extremist Eastern alliances aimed at containing extremist Moslem fundamentalism in Iran. Challenging the view that moderate Arab leaders were alarmed to learn about U.S. deals with Iran, Mr. Nimrodi said that Saudi Arabia, for example, has been negotiating with Iranian factions since the early 1980s.

since the early 1980s. His remarks appeared designed to deflect rising public criticism of the role of arms deal-ers in the formulation of U.S. policy. His ac-count was confirmed in substance, although not always in detail, by other participants.

r. Nimrodi contended that Middle Eastern diplomacy is often handled by arms dealers because leaders in the region hesitate to trust their intelligence services with such unorthodox contacts.

U.S. contacts with Iran that were brokered by arms dealers, Mr. Nimrodi contended, produced results until the contacts were pre-empt-ed by U.S. officials. The officials, he said, bungled it through impatience over delays in freeing U.S. hostages and tactlessness in deal-ing with Iranians.

Mr. Nimrodi's says his expertise is based on nearly 15 years in Tehran as an intelligence operative heading an Israeli military mission that trained the shah's forces and sold weapons. After retiring in 1974, he returned to Tehran as a businessman where he amassed a fortune, often as an agent of the shah's relatives. His activities established him in an informal International group of arms tycoons, including Mr. Khashoggi, with secret channels to political leaders. Mr. Khashoggi generally is considered the most important figure in the business. Mr. Nimrodi contends that he and Mr. Kha-choggi interaction of the international im-shoggi share a capacity for international intrigue and a visionary enthusiasm for a peaceful Middle East that benefits from what he called "Jewish brains and Arab wealth." Challenging the media image of Mr. Khassoghi as simply a playboy who amasses fortunes in extravagant and questionable commissions, Mr. Nimrodi said: "This man has done amazing things to try for peace, to help Saudi Arabia, to help the Arabs and the Palestinians, and even, yes, to help Israel." Israel and Saudi Arabia, which have no diplomatic relations, have never officially ended their state of war. Mr. Khashoggi, Mr. Nimrodi said, had been risks of his life and for things that he didn't have to do for money," be said.

Jacob Nimrodi

Mr. Khashoggi, be said, had organized oumercos meetings between Israeli and Arab leaders, including prominent Palestinians; ob-tained help from Sudan's leader at the time, Gaafar Nimeiri, in bringing black Jews out of Ethiopia; and conveyed an offer from Fahd for Ethiopia; and conveyed an offer from Fahd for a $100-million fund for regional development if Israel would allow the Saudi flag to fly over the Al-Aqsa Mosque in old Jerusalem. More re-cently, he said, Mr. Khashoggi offered a $50 million investment if Israel would compromise with Emergence the Toho would compromise with Egypt over the Taba enclave on the Sinai.

A spokesman for Mr. Khashoggi would only confirm that he and Mr. Nimrodi had attended meetings with Iranian and U.S. officials. He declined to characterize Mr. Khashoggi's relations with Fahd.

According to Mr. Nimrodi, Mr. Khashoggi became involved with Saudi policy toward Iran in early 1980, shortly after Moslem extremists took over the Grand Mosque in Mecca, Islam's boliest shrine.

R. Khashoggi put Saudi officials in touch with an Iranian informant, Manucher Ghorbanifar, an Iranian businessman with links to SAVAK, the shah's internal security service, who had become a foreign-based adviser to Iran's revolutionary government.

He reportedly provided information about plans for terrorism by the new Iranian regime that enabled the Saudi Arabians to take countermicasures, "His warnings were coupled with demands for arms for his Iranian sources, and the Saudis thought of him oot as a spy but as an emissary of 'moderate' Iranians," Mr. Nimrodi said

"I don't know what people mean by 'moder-ates;' these are people ready to do anything --they have their own vision - but I guess the word will do as well as any," Mr. Nimrodi said, adding: "What they are, is pro-Western." In early 1985. Mr. Ghorbanifar told the San-dis that these Iranian factions felt that they urgently needed direct contacts with the United the go-between for many secret negotiations for Arab leaders. "Khashoggi is still taking great gle with leftist, pro-Soviet factions.

Adnan M. Khashoggi, the Saudi businessman, has done amazing things to try for peace, to help Saudi Arabia, to help the Arabs and the Palestinians, and even, yes, to help Israel.'

At about the same time, Shimon Peres, then prime minister of Israel, was visited by Michael

Ledeen, a consultant working for the U.S. Na-tional Security Council. Could Israel, he reportedly asked, help the United States cope more effectively with Iran?

Mr. Nimrodi said that Mr. Ledeen specifically wanted help in freeing William Buckley, the CIA station chief in Beirut who was taken hostage in March that year. Mr. Ledeen says that "the subject of hostages did not come up," but he acknowledges that his session with Mr. Peres led to U.S.-Iranian meetings brokered by

According to Mr. Nimrodi, Mr. Peres told Mr. Nimrodi, his partner, Mr. Schwimmer, and David Kimche, a former deputy head of Mos-erd Iread's intelligence deputy head of Mossad, Israel's intelligence service, and former director-general of the Israel's interests and pick up to "handle this for Israel's interests and pick up

Mr. Peres has disputed that Mr. Nimrodi and his friends were "assigned" a mission, and he subsequently put his own aide in charge of liaison with the United States on Iran. But Mr.

The Israeli group then met with Iranian emissaries, who were accompanied by Mr. Ghor-banifar and Mr. Khashoggi. Mr. Nimrodi, discussions, quoted the Iranians as saying: "We know that leftists are waiting to emerge" when Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, Iran's leader, Boorishness in Long Supply Very quickly, Mr. Nimrodi claimed, U.S. officials became overly eager on the hostage issue.

"The stupidity. It makes me crazy to think what they try to do, when they don't know these people, how they think," be said. Pointing to the desk in his living room near Hyde Park in London, he told of Robert C. McFarlane, the former U.S. national security adviser, who "sat there, first lecturing the Iranian emissaries like a Boy Scout, then demanding they give all the hostages back at once, and then pleading."

"He kept saying, 'Give me the hostages, and everything is possible — aid, missions, whatev-er you want,' Mr. Nimrodi quoted Mr. McFarlance as saying, "The Iranians kept say-ing, 'Give us weapons, then you get a hostage, let us go a step at a time '" let us go a step at a time."

fter that meeting, in December 1985, and A after two weapons deliveries, Mr. Nim-rodi said, he and his colleagues were supplanted as handlers of the contacts by U.S. officials, including Lieutenant Colonel Oliver L. North, whom Mr. Nimrodi characterizes as lacking subtlety. Mr. Nimrodi's own philosophy of dealing with Iranians is anchored in a parable about the Iranian mentality. An Iranian is drowning, and a passer-by says: "Give me your hand," but the Iranian in the water prefers to die rather than "give" his hand. Mr. Nimrodi continued: "Another Iranian comes by and says: 'Take my hand, take it' — and he will convince the drowning franian to accept the offer and save his own life."

Ignorance of how to deal with Iranian susceptibilities, Mr. Nimrodi said, frayed the guarded trust which the arms dealers managed to maintain until December 1985.

He was involved in the second big arms shipment to Iran on Nov. 24, 1985, involving Hawk and aircraft missiles. The transaction went wrong when the lranians unpacked the missiles and found that they were an old model, not the improved Hawks they had been prom-

The Iranians were outraged. In Geneva, Ayatollah Kangalu, a deputy prime minister work-ing with Mr. Nimrodi, collapsed with a stroke at the news. Mr. Nimrodi managed to calm the Iranians by immediately refunding their down payment.

He speculated that the old Hawks were substituted for the newer version Hawks by Israeli military officers. "I think it was just thinking small, thinking they would ship out old ones and keep the new ones coming from the States. They were thinking small, it's so stupid."

nilar short-term political reflexes in the United States, be said, exposed the Iranian connection prematurely. "When the second hostage," the Reverend Lawrence M. Jenco, "was released, the Syrian government claimed that it had helped, probably because it was trying to fight its reputatioo as a terrorist state," he said.

President Ronald Reagan refused to allow Syria any credit, and Mr. Nimrodi speculated During these initial discussions, the Iranians mistook the Israelis for U.S. officials, Mr. Nimthat Syrian officials, in reprisal, tipped off a Beirut magazine about the U.S.-Iran dealing. By Thomas Netter International Herald Tribune

ARSAW - Five years ago, just ARSAW — Five years ago, just before the declaration of martial law mortally wounded the Solidarity mortally wounded the Solidarity union and stilled the brief flash of freedom of expression it conferred, a friend asked why journalists always wrote sterile stories about politics, strikes and economics but seldom paid attention to why mothers found it difficult or impossible in get milk for their children.

That question has haunted me ever since. It came to mind again during a recent visit to Poland in a story told by another friend who was trying to get milk for ber children af-ter the radiation leak at the Soviet nuclear plant at Chernobyl.

The woman, who has two children, told how she waited in line in get packages of pow-dered milk after fresh milk was banned. When she finally reached the counter, the elerk refused to give her the milk because the necessary chit on her racon card had already been clipped. Her protests that it was re-moved by mistake were to no avail. Unable to purchase the powdered milk, and bitterly frustrated, she first begged the shop assistant, then burst into tears. In the West, one hears of "defiant" Poles, united under a creed of opposition to the government and that Poles are "freer" than their oeighbors in Eastern Europe. Within Poland, it is another story. Yes, the dissidents continue their planning and elandestine meetings, and the underground publishers produce leaflets, oewspapers and books. But everyday life is still hard.

PEOPLE who know the Poles inti-mately know them to be, by and large, a friendly, hospitable people. But that clerk's mdifference is a sad and telling example of what one Polish friend calls a "socialist boorishness" that has set in, repeating itself more and more in public life. Deprived of a voice in the running of society or their daily lives, many Poles have moved inward - behind the doors of their apartments, behind a wall of frustration, anger and despair or, like the shop clerk, behind a vencer of indifference.

"Your problem is not my problem, so leave me alone," is a prevailing atotude of many people. What one Polish friend calls a "lack of collective consciousness, or the ability to take collective action" is wearily apparent. Despite the relative improvement in the shops on the eve of martial law five years ago there was virtually nothing available - I found a heavy sense of futility and even depression in the post-holiday, Warsaw gloom.

Prices have skyrocketed, inflation is at 30 percent, and salaries have failed to keep pace. Poles still somehow find enough money, enough food and enough household goods to get by. But it's difficult. Lines are everywhere, with their own, demoralizing dynamic. In one instance, as a clerk wrapped a purchase for me, the pressure in the line be-hind me began to build. An older woman began to lean on me, pushing without reasoo to get further ahead in the line, tightening up the gaps between us. There was a look on her face of impatience, irritation, almost as the dramatic public events, the legal or illegal gatherings to commemorate the innumeraanniversaries of victories and defeats. triumphs and tragedies that define Poland's history

If the shops are selling goods, why are there the lines, the intermunable waits, the indifferent, often rude clerks? Aren't things supposed to be better after five years of "nor-malization?"

In basic terms, they are, but in human terms there are not. Life in Poland today is a time-consuming, debilitating exercise in pushing one's way through a system more suited to the 19th century. It is worsened by bitter memories of the "war," as the Poles call the state of emergency imposed on Dec. 13, 1981, and the consistent re-entrenchment of state authority in all organizations since then.

Talk abounds of another period of demands for reform, as prices rise and the work-ers' ability to buy declines. One evening in central Warsaw, I joined a crowd of people looking in vain for a streetcar. As one streetcar after the other passed, either off-duty or the wrong number, the crowd moved, from one stop to another, growing in size with each move, mumbling louder with each passing vehicle.

It was an absurd scene that would seem facile and overly theatrical were it oot happening on the cold, frozen slush of Warsaw. Somehow, that shuffling crowd of unhappy people, mumbling to themselves and desperately seeking a way bome, was all too real.

Guillermo Suarcz-Mason, a former Argentine army chief of staff, had been living for an unknown length of time in Foster City, California, about 15 miles (25 kilometers) south of San Francisco, officials said Saturday.

Inspector Larry Homenick, who supervises the Marshals Service's international operations, said General Suarez-Mason had been the object of a search in the United States since November 1985.

For at least part of that time, he said, the former general lived in New York City, where he was last seen during the Christmas holi-days. Mr. Homenick said he also was believed to have been in Mi-

General Snarez-Mason, who was arrested on his 63d birthday, was a member of the rightist military junta that ruled Argentina during the late 1970s and early 1980s.

Station Chief Suspended Court Rejects By CIA for Contra Link Labor Law In France

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches WASHINGTON - The Central Intelligence Agency has suspended its station chief in Costa Rica after carning that he failed to fully disclose his participation in a secret network that flew military supplies to Nicaragnan rebels, U.S. intelligence sources said.

The suspension of the station chief, who used the pseudonym Tomas Castillo, followed his recall earlier this month. It also followed two internal CIA investigations that cleared him of illegal actions in connection with U.S. shipments of military aid to the rebels, known as contras, in violation of a congressional ban on such aid.

The sources, who requested anonymity, said Saturday that Mr. Castillo was suspended within the past few days after CIA officials were notified that documents be onging to Lieutenant Colonel Oliver L. North, the former National Security Council aide, showed that Mr. Castillo was more deeply involved in the contra supply net-work than he had admitted. The CIA apparently was notified by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The Reagan administration, meanwhile, signaled its resolve to aid the contras with Frank C. Carfucci, the new national security adviser, endorsing the policy at a con-ference on Central America.

In his first public statements since he was appointed early this month, Mr. Carlucci said that he had asked his staff for a review of the field situation, the strength of the Nicaraguan government forces and the prognosis for their conflict with the contras.

Mr. Carlucci acknowledged that allegations that proceeds from the sale of weapons to Iran had gone to the contras had probably made the continuation of U.S. aid to the rebels "more difficult." But he said U.S. policy had not changed.

"I strongly support the demo-cratic forces in Central America," he said, adding that the issue was close to the heart" of President Ronald Reagan.

Ferré, Capucci Strengthen Rome Couture

ROME - The Rome spring-summer couture collections, shown last week, were much stronger than usual this season, thanks to Gianfranco Ferré's second collection and to the purist Roberto Capucci, whose collection was a rare treat. Valentino still reigned as superstar, but for once he did not have to bear the whole burden

Friday night, President Francesco Cossiga banded out awards and held a party at the Quirinal Palace for about 600 fashion people. Among the honorees were Giorgio Armani, who was made Cavaliere del Lavoro, the highwho was mane cavarete de Lavoro, de ingrest est order awarded by the Ministry of Industry and Commerce; the house of Missoni; Fino Lancetti; and Lina Magistrali, the senior acam-stress at the house of Valentino, where she has worked for 27 years.

The best news out of these collections was the explosion of color for evening wear. It is proving hard to break women away from easy, reassuring black, so the Italian designers should be congratulated for bringing color back. These were not washed-out pastels but strong, lumi-nous colors, including purple, hot pink, tur-quoise and a delightful, long-forgotten sun yel-

The other good news was the appearance of feminine, romantic collections with softer, less-padded shoulders, belted waists and hardly any pants in sight, except those presented by Ferre, who has his eye firmly fixed on the U.S. market. At Valentino's, evening gowns were pleated, shirred, ruffled and petticoated, with strong echoes of Scariett O'Hara and the Deep South. Some ruffles extended all the way around the armholes, which was a bit too cute.

After his show, Valentino said he did not remember a time when his technique had been so precise as now. He had whole dresses made of shirred fabric that shaped the body curve by fastidious curve. This will mean fitting every customer, which is what custom-made is about.

His daytime clothes were not terribly interesting, with a slender, pleated trumpet shape emerging as the best of the lot. But Valentino recouped with his romantic evening wear, which is sure to win him a lot of soft-hearted women tired of sparse, hard chic. His daytime clothes were mostly bandbox-often sporting girlish petticoats. Jackets were the bolero variety, and they, too, were ultrafe-minine, with lace handkerchiefs drooping out of breast pockets. As usual for Valentino, hemlines were well above the knees and heels were high and spiky.

Together with one or two dresses like slim columns, Valentino offered the big, ruffled gowns of bygone garden parties. The prettiest were simple, long-waisted with a camisole top, while the skirt exploded in several tiers of organza. The skirts were further dolled up with lace or embroidery tucked under each ruffle. One black dress was a solid sea of tiny lace mffles Valentino loved little polka dots, even for evening, where they toned down the excessive-ness of all those ruffles. The dots also looked herter than the occasional flower prints.

There is hope for Ferre. His second couture collection was miles ahead of his first, with a definite breakthrough in evening wear. The clothes, softer and more feminine than Ferre's streamlined ready-to-wear, were exquisitely made, which was not the case in his first collection six months ago.

The silhouette was a clear-cut mushroom with slim skirt topped by a rounded top. The influence, with lots of dramatic capes, came from the 1950s and Balenciaga. One of the softer touches was a profusion of silk flowers, which Ferre said he found at an old company in Genoa that used to make flowers for Chanel. These were tucked everywhere, including on the side of a shoc.

A man with a strong, graphic vision, Ferre played up black and white and navy and white with effective results. Some of his convoluted white tops looked like whipped cream out of a can. The touches of color were equally asser-tive, such as a bolero made of unliteolored cloth chrysanthe

The collection not to miss last week was Capucci's, which was a trip into the fashion unknown. This shy, reserved designer, who produces a collection every three or four years, reaped wild applause in a standing ovation.

The shapes dwarfed everyone else's. These clothes were beyond the outre. Capacci, an artist who kneps afloat through royalties from his perfumes, consistently refuses to enter the megabucks fashion game. The result is an intensely personal adventure backed by an impressive technique.

The collection started with boxy black dress es followed by immense chilfon ponchos edged with waves of giant organza ruffles. Miles of knife pleats, shaped by a strong, unerring hand, twisted, curled and colled in every possible direction. Some swided around and around skinny bodies, giving them statute and pres-ence. Stiff satin shapes like Alexander Calder mobiles were draped away from short slim dresses. Some pointed dresses evoked minarets. Others were decorated with brilliantly colored giant fans or butterflies.

The majestic panniered dresses could have stepped out of a Velasquez painting, while Capuca's sumptious palette had the sheen and richness of a Renaissance prayer book.

Olivier Rossetti, who inherited the Andre Lang business, said he would no longer show a couture collection. The reason, he said, is that his multimillion-dollar business is solidly rooted in the United States, where his clientele is more than happy with his perfectly executed ready-to-wear.

This event provides an opportunity for families to participate in this expression of French-American friendship, just as thousands of French children and their parents contributed to the original Statue of Liberty a century ago.

The suggested tax-deductible contribution, including the film and meal, is: Adults, 130 francs --- Children, 85 francs. Names of all donors, children and adults, will be printed in the IHT.

The 90-minute film, a warmhearted, animated recounting of the American immigrant experience, is in English with French subtitles. Critics have described it as "stanning," "delightful," and "uplifting".

The evening is made possible through the generosity of Universal Pictures, United International Pictures, Burger King and Société Gaumont.

NE of the favorite expressions employed by foreigners living in Thailand is "typically Thai." They use it to explain that relaxed, unshakable and generous Thai equanimity which constantly amazes visitors.

Last month I was rushing to the Chiang Mai airport with loads of boxed handicrafts purchased during an afternoon of determined bargaining. My guide, noting my typically Western state of high anxiety, dropped me off for a traditional Thai massage, took my ticket and acquisitions to the airport, checked them in and returned to pick me up just before the flight.

Typically That," said a Swiss native living agners. Bangkok when he heard about the incident. The "typically Thai" articude makes Thailand as much a state of mind as an intriguing destination with decidedly untypical shopping as well as equally unique culinary, cultural, religious, archaeological and physical attractions. It is reinforced not only by the country's 30,000-some temples, omnipresent restaments to the calming influence of Buddhism, but by the tranquil nature of the 55 million Thai people. The Thais actually do smile enough to merit their country's reputation as "The Land of Smiles."

Thai Buddhism, with its time-honored ideals of chatity, tolerance and kindness, obviously has a gentle and restraining influence. It is also accountable for Thailand's interesting blend of hospitality, permissiveness, acceptance and moderation. The onctime Siam and contemporary Thailand (which means "land of the free") was never a colony, so its traditions are well-entrenched and timeless, and the populace is exceptionally open and friendly to forkok is a sprawling mix of ballet and burlesque, of traffic jams and temples. But there is calm amid the frenzy. Drivers, for example, don't get particularly upset sitting in traffic for hours and rarely bonk their horns. Shopkeepers are quick to offer a discount but don't force sales. A visitor can sense the tranquility conveyed by colorful orchids and screne shrines.

TRAVEL IN

I try to become "typically Thai" when I visit Thailand in an effort to abandon my Occidental mind-set. The move from West to East is embodied, for me, by the wai - the prayer-like clasped hand greeting which is an expression implying appreciation, respect, thanks, reverence, homage and a

"typically Thai" spirit. When I arrive in Bangkok I try to take a symbolic step to make the adjustment. I often head to the Wat Po (war means temple) where I put coins in the 108 bowls representing the reincarnations of Buddha, release birds from their cages to ensure my future well-being, or just marvel at the reclining Buddha - which splendidly shows Buddha in the position in which he entered Nirvana. But whatever I do on arrival, it usually requires a few hours to become even remotely "typically Thai."

Once the conversion is made, however, a visitot cannot help but be entranced by the country. No

Naturally it takes a bit of a leap to get into the blessed cord or some other kind of amulet to take the "typically Thai" spirit home with me.

> Of course, there are more than spiritual reasons to visit Thailand. I thrive on eating at the numerous stalls which sell fast food Asian-style, including noodles, rice and fried bananas. I enjoy taking thukthuks, the Thai three-wheeled taxi cabs, around town and spending the day bargaining and buying at different shops.

> Thailand truly is a country with something for everyone - spiced food and equally spicy nightlife, hotels with exceptional service, shopping bargains bordering on the indiculous, visits to extraordinary religious and historical sites and trips up nivers, into jungles and onto virgin islands.

Getting to Know Bangkok – in the Space of One Day

ANGKOK is not a city for strolling. -It's too hot and humid most of the year, the sidewalks are cluttered and the traffic is reminiscent of Le Mans or - Indianapolis. The streets are full of ugly shophouses, each one looking very much like the next, broken up by high-rise blocks. A rourist can easily become bewildered, and eager to skip the place for the simpler pleasures of Thailand's outlying beaches and hills.

Take a tip from those who live here: the city reveals its attractions slowly. The usually gentle ways of the Thais, their exquisite manners, sweet tempers and their famous sense of fun, somehow cancel out the contrasting noise and pandemonium of the streets. There is a wealth of things to see and do, but when time is a factor it's important to plan carefully where to go and how to get there preferably on wheels.

A good way to begin a one-day excursion is with a calm breakfast on the outside terrace at the Oriental Hotel (it is, without a doubt, one of the East's great hotels), overlooking the Chao Phraya River. One of the other, newer riverside hotels, such as the Shangri-la, is a good substitute for those staying in another part of town.

outside Bangkok.

Despite urban development, rivers and canals are still important in Thai life. For an expedition through the klongs (canals), try a speedy long-tailed boat or, for a steadier, more civilized pace, a boat with a tradicional engine that is less disturbing to the river-life. The boats that are rethered at various points along the waterways are available for rental.

Most tours of Bangkok will take in the floating market where women sell fruit or coconut milk from their slim, bobbing craft. Also popular is a visit to the Temple of the Dawn (Wat Anin), 2 soaring 250-foot structure covered with pieces of porcelain stuck into cement. A stop can sometimes be made to view the royal barges sheltered on ramps under a roof. These scarlet and gold craft, some of which have omate figureheads arching high out over the water, are used only rarely, on ceremonial occasions. Next October, more than 50 of them, manned by oarsmen chanoing to the sounds of drums and trumpers, will glide down the river as part of a yearlong celebration for King Bhumibol Adulyadej, the popular monarch who has ruled for 40 years and will turn 60 on December.5.

Thais are fervent royalists and regard their king with a reverence long since disappeared in many other constitutional monarchies. He is a modern and immensely hard-working king, spending many months of the year traveling "upcountry" to oversee development projects. He seems most content with a camera round his neck, a walkie-talkie stuck in one pocket and a map in hand, questioning local officials or villagers about a new road or a dam.

A visit to the Grand Palace compound is almost required. The most photographed set of buildings in the city, it is a glorious mixture of architectural styles taking up about one square mile behind high walls. The Temple of the Emerald Buddha, containing the nation's most sacred image, is also here. Other temples to see are Wat Po, with its enormous reclining Buddha, and War Benchamabopitr, known as the Marble Temple.

For an unusual lunch stop, the Pantip Restaurant on Petchburi Road, gives the visitor a taste of Bangkok's Chinese community. The dim sum, brought round on trays by a procession of young women, is filling, and a full-blown floor show is thrown in - all for only a few dollars. Thai songstresses, as they are called, croon sweetly, and are usually followed by a visiting artist from Singapore, Taiwan or Malaysia. She (most top-billers are women) belts out numbers in front of a full orchestra, limber male dancers, revolving glass balls and srage mist. It is noisy and brassy, yet memorable.

The afternoon's activioes are a matter of personal raste. Many tourists drive about one hour west to the Rose Garden, an entertainment center featuring a daily cultural show that includes folk dancing, few-holds-barred Thai boxing, sword fighting and clephants. In addition there are restaurants and landscape gardens.

For those who want a quieter, more sesthetic afternoon, the old hands point to the less-visited ancient city. About a 45-minute drive southeast of Bangkok, the city stands as an extraordinary openair museum. Famous temples, monuments and statues, some of them full-size, have been painsrakingly and accurately reproduced. Some are replicas of buildings that no longer exist, such as the main hall of the grand palace at Avurthaya, the old capital, which was built in 1448 and destroyed in 1767. There is also a reconstruction of a street in an old market town with theaters and shophouses, a riverside village and a floating market.

Getting back into the city, the traffic jams can bring everything to a sweaty halt and may preclude any more visits. In the lucky event that there's a spare hour or so, two spots are well worth a visit.

Jim Thompson's house, off Rama I Road, is a museum of traditional Thai houses filled with antiques. Thompson, an American who helped build up the Thai silk industry, and subsequently disappeared, was also a great art collector. "Not only have you beautiful things," Somerset Maugham once wrote to him, "but what is more rare, you have displayed them beautifully."

Also worth seeing, on Sri Ayurthaya Road, is the

Life in a Buddhist Monastery : Instructive Rite of Passage

ANS Tuggener, the 50-yearold, Zurich-born general manager of Diethelm Travel, became Thana Thanapawar last March after he was granted Thai nationality. But the most memorable aspect of his conversion was not the assumption of a second name. It was the two weeks he spent last August in a remote Buddhist monastery called Dao Ruang (Temple of the Stars) in the eastern part of the country.

Most young Thai males, whatever their social status, spend at least three months as monks. The stint, a tradicional rite of passage, enables them to grow spiritually through austerity, strict discipline and the laborious study of Buddha's reachings. Thai custom dictates that if a son becomes a monk for any length of time he will save his parents' souls.

Without this education the rest of my life would be incomplete," said Chiradej Saleesung, a 22-yearold Thai, during his monkbood in the Wat Benchampaborpit a few years ago. "No Thai man can be fulfilled without being familiar with the Buddhist scriptures, the 227 monasoc rules and the 500 stories describing the Buddha's existence prior to Nirvana."

Thai men also return to the temple periodically during their professional lives. Tuggener, who has lived in Thailand since 1970, had a keen personal desire to experience Swiss names. "Thais live a wisdom monkhood when he became a Thai ciózen.

"I have always been very intrigued by the calm approach to life in Thailand which is essentially due losophy of acceptance."

Tuggener's interest in Buddhism came naturally. Indeed, almost evcrything in Thailand, from the spirit houses in front of most buildings to the oracle he consulted to select his Thai name, is religiously oriented. He chose to enter the monastery

Dao Ruang, where he had done some social work, because the head monk is a well-known teacher of Buddhism and medication. Prior to entering the temple, Tuggener spent three months studying Buddhist teachings, songs and ceremonics in Pali (the liturgical language

Thanapawar's soint in the monastery was like that of any other Thai. He abstained from alcohol and sex, slept on a hard bed, did not touch money, rose at 4 a.m. and, after morning prayers, went into the street with a begging bowl for the daily food collection. Following the second and last meal of the day at 11 a.m., Thanapawar spent the afternoon studying prayers for the following morning. During the evening, the monks meditated until they went to bed at 10 p.m.

"The food collection is the most beauoful part of the experience because the village people come out in masses to practice religion and earn merit by offering food to the monks," Thanspawat continued.

Tuggener was derobed. Returning to Switzerland for a short vacation, he explained that the bald head (which most monks have shaved with every full moon) was due to a skin infection. His Thai employees, however, were extremely proud of the effort

We realized he had become one of us," said Suracham Vibulpakdi, one of the guides at Tuggener's travel agency.

In the future, Tuggener hopes to spend a three-month stretch in the remple.

The Sunday market in Bangkok attracts locals and tourists alike.

World Diners Develop an Appetite for Thai Cuisine

HAI restaurants are now cropping up in cities around the world. It was bound to happen - what's really surprising is that it took so long.

Though influenced by Chinese, Indian, Javanese and Portuguese cuisine, Thai food is quite distinctive.

Thai soups, often a meal in themselves, are eaten whenever they are ready, rather than as an introduction to the main dishes. Try tom yum gung, a soup of shrimp, lemongrass, red chillies, parsley and mushrooms; hot and sour soup with prawns; or coconut soup with chicken.

Besides soups, the variety of main dishes is tremendous. There's fried noodles with beef and broccoli, papaya salad, stuffed omelettes, fried park with garlic, fried chicken with cashew nuts, fried beef in ovster sauce, fried fish in red sauce or a variety of curries.

Coriander is used copiously along with other spices, such as lemongrass, basil and cardoman. But it is the chillies that often prove must memorable. Foreigners often shrug nonchalanely when warned that Thai food is extremely hot and spicy, but may find out in a matter of seconds that they have lost the roof of their mouth. The sauces, such as fish sauce and shrimp paste, which are of a varying degrees of spiciness, are also worth custing.

Desserts, in contrast, are mild. Try mangoes with sticky rice, gold threads (sugar and egg yolks), coconut ice cream or banana in coconut milk. While mangoes usually head the list of native Thai fruits, also delicious are mangosteens (dark purple with white flesh), papayas (often caten with breakfast), rambutans (soft, white and juicy), as well as the usual bananas, pincapples and melons.

Then there are the notorious durians - pungent and controversial. Some people adore the fruit. Others, however, have been known to call them "prickly stink bombs" or "medieval torrure devices with the flavor of onions and ice cream." A foreign adventurer in the last century wrote that eating durian was "akin to eating herring and bleu cheese over an open sewer."

This is not a wine-drinking society; diners usually order beer or whiskey. The two most popular beers are Kloster, which is similar to American beer, and Singha, which has malrier taste. There are plenty of imported whiskies available; the popular local brand, called Mekhong, is definitely an acquired Laste. Thais like to car in the open ait, and the temperature is usually perfect for this in the evenings. There are numerous garden restaurants - a series of roofed, open-sided salar with ceiling fans, often joined by walkways over canals filled with water lilies. Indoor restaurants, nearly always air-condicioned, tend to favor exotic fish in aquariums and miniature waterfalls as part of the decor. If there is live music it's likely to be a succession of female singers. All is informal - no jackets or des. And many toutists are surprised by how inexpensive the bill can be at the end of the meal. A favorite haunt of Bangkok locals is the Sala Rim Naam (on the riverbank opposite the Oriental Hotel). To get here, there's a free ferry boat ode from the botel; on a thunderous night during the monsoon season, this can be a dramatic opening act. The enclosed portion of the restaurant has a fixed meal and classical Thai dancing; but I prefer to sit outside on the terrace close to the river. Other favorire restaurants are the Tapkaew (263/2 Asoke-Dindaeng), which has a large garden and Silom Village (Sukhumvit 31), also open-air but smaller, with a resident Thai string band and tennis courts at the back. The Seafood Reseaurant (388 Sukhumvit) is like a huge supermarker - diners choose their fish and vegetables, place them in a cart and pay at the checkout counter. Everything is then whisked away, with specific cooking instructions, to the kitchens, which are in full view. The finished meal is served at nearby tables. Also good are the Wanakarm (off Sukhumvir 23), a small, inexpensive, modest cafe, and Lemongrass (Sukhumvit 24), quiet and achieving a growing reputation among serious diners. Street food is everywhere - at most major intersections an entrepreneur has parked a cooking cart and set up three or four tables on the sidewalk. For those who want to my street food in a more ordered setting, the Ambassador Hotel (Sukhumvit at Soi 11) has a food center with rows of booths for picking and choosing.

Nightlife in Bangkok: Thaiing One On

ONT be concerned that the varied forms of nightlife found throughout Thailand, long the capital of nocturnal excitement in Asia, have gone downhill, been altered for the worse, or even disappeared. They haven't.

There is still something for evervone - from classical dance performances at the National Theater to the somewhat less-classical establishments on Patpong Road, where nightclubs are thriving, drinks are inexpensive (U.S. $1-3) by foreign standards and the entertainment is as varied as the people looking for it. Malaysians, of course, still cross the border to Har Yai, and South Parcaya still has its neon-lit streets. But Bangkok is where most foreigners go for action.

"Nightlife is an interesting facet of the vast array of tourist possibilities in Thailand," said Dharmnoon Prachuabmob, governot of the Tourism Authority of Thailand. "I would estimate that at least a quarter of all visitors take a look at what is going on."

But Parpong Road is not just for men. Narurally Bangkok's ribald nightlife leads to the obligatory iokes:

Tips and Tidbits for Tourists

HAIS are extremely tolerant and it is difficult to offend them. But they are also a traditional people, and will appreciare it if you show deference to their social and religious practices.

Thais revere the royal family and do not appreciate any criocism of the monarchy.

Ourward expressions of anger are considered crude and boorish. Thai men, in a simple expression of friendship, often hold hands in public. Thai couples, however, do not because public display of affection between sexes is frowned upon.

The average Thai surname is long and complex and people are usually called by their first name preceeded by Khun. When greeting a Thai, men should say "Sawardee, krab" and women Sawatdee, ka."

It is the Thai belief that the head is the highest and most important part of the body. Do not touch someone's head, even as a friendly gesture to a child.

Always remove shoes before entering a Thai temple, home or mosque. Do not go into religious shrines shirtless, in shorts or wearing other unsuitable attire. Women cannot enter the monks' quarters nor give anything directly to a monk

Thailand's Beachfront Tourism Center: Major Resorts and Hidden Treasures

Phuket, undiscovered a decade ago, is now a prime spot for tourists seeking relaxed resorts.

HE 2,500-kilometer-loog Thai coastline, which runs along both the Gulf of Thailand and the Indian Ocean, includes palm-fringed and rugged, rocky beaches, jungle-covered cliffs, deserted coves, unspoiled fishing villages, isolated islands and sophisticated resorts. While the crowded beaches sometimes resemble those in the south of France, there are many secluded stretches of sand where coconut palms far outnumber people. Thai resorts range from the popular and fashionable to the sedate and still-undiscovered. But almost everywhere there are facilioes for waterskiing, parasailing, windsurfing, snorkeling and, of course, sunbathing. The Thai Riviera, as the coast on the Gulf of Thailand is called, is a favorice for many Thais because of its proximity to Bangkok. They usually head to Bang Saen, 100 kilometers southeast of the capital, or the crescent bay of Parcaya, 150 kilometers away.

Booming Pattaya (the name means "the wind blowing from the southwest to the northeast at the beginning of the rainy season") is the Thai Riviera's jer-set resort. And it keeps maintaining the social pace: The Royal Cliff Beach Horel added a regal touch last month when it opened the seven-story Royal Wing with 86 executive suites. Pattaya's night life, which has camed it the name Parpong-on-the-Sea, continues to foster the reputa-oon that began when it was "discovered" by American servicemen in the early 1960s. But before hitting the beaches and clubs, there are other attractions: a good daytime view of the area can be obtained from Phra Tamnak Hill, elephanes can be seen demonstrating their working capabilioes at the Pattaya

Elephant Kraal, and it is worth boaring to the nearby coral islands. For a more relaxing spot on the Thai Riviera, drop in on Hua Hin, the royal family constructed a summer residence there in the 1930s, has spacious beaches, a golf course and the usual water-oriented sports.

Hua Hin's fame is also associated with the Railway Hotel, which was used to portray Phnom Penh's hotel in the film "The Killing Fields," It is also known for the opportunity it offers for a solitary horse ride on the beach. Further south is Songkhia, an old Chinese city built on a peninsula with beaches, a lake and two offshore islands called Car and Rat.

Phuket, undiscovered a decade ago, is now a "must" resort for tourists. Known as the pearl of Thailand (the oame, however, means "hill" in Thai), Phuket is 550 miles south of Bangkok on the Andaman Sea and is most easily reached by plane - though a causeway connects it to the mainland.

Why go now? Dharmoon Prachuabmoh, the governor of the Tourism Authority of Thailand, discussed the country's tourism strategies during a recent promotional stopover in Nice, France.

Why is 1987 "1 isit Thailand Yotr"?

The private and public sector, and the Thai population in general, is gearing up for His Majesty King Bhumibol Adulyadej's ooth birthday on December 5. The birthday which completes a person's fifth 12 year cycle is a momentous event in the life of every Thai and the nation will salute the king with exceptional fanfare.

The Thai people will pay their respects to the monatch with 12 months of color and pageantry, special festivals and celebrations. Our regular festivals will be enhanced and special events will be held, including many symbolic state ceremonies steeped in ancient traditions. The major events will be the roval procession on October 16 and the king's birthday on December 5. The fere, is not just in Bangkok but throughout the country, and each province will feature traditional local fairs, giving tourists an added incentive to move off the beaten ______J.S.M. path. There is something exciring every week and we expect it to create an increased interest in visiting Thailand.

> What would you do if you had a week to spend in Thailand?

First of all, I would extend my itincrary to two weeks, which is the amount of time necessary for one to get a good sense of the country. I would spend three days in Bangkok and then pursue personal interests - sunbathing, shopping, game viewing, culture, architecture or archacology - in different parts of the country.

Thai horels, food and nightlife are all affordable and there are numerous shopping bargains in fashion, leather, antiques and other goods. The cost of living is half as much outside Bangkok as within and employment-creating sector We will expand the range of facilines and services to more parts of the country to further make Thailand a top destination for travelers. We will keep catering to knowledgeable, experienced travelers, about 30 percent of whom will continue to come on package tours, but will still keep hotel rates and prices reasonable.

Are there are serious problems that should be anticipated by prospective tourists?

The major problem is that, except within Bangkok, Thais do not always speak English. But there are excellent guides and toutist offices throughout the country.

Getting to Thailand is no problem. Thai Airways International currently flics to 43 key destinations in 30 countries. Last autumn it added Stockholm and Düsseldorf to its European roures. The airline has an added service, Royal Orchid Holidays, which sets up group ot individual tours. And there are a number of other good local agencies, like Dicthelm Travel and World Travel Service.

ERGE a 600-year-old artistic tradition, superb contemporary craftsmanship and low labor costs and you get some great of other excellent silk and cotton shopping.

Silks and cottons, sapphires and rubics, anoques and "instant anoques" are some of Thailand's best buys. Finely tailored suits and madeto-order shoes, once Hong Kong's great force, are now found at far cheaper prices in Bangkok. Handcrafted silverware and celadons are other musts.

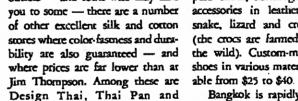

The classic start to a Bangkok shopping spree is Jim Thompson, the premier silk store named after the American who revived the Thai silk industry after World War II (and then disappeared mysteriously into the jungle).

The two-story emporium vibrates with elegant salesladies and unfurling bolts of house-designed and printed silks and cottons. The colors, sheens and designs are thriving with its creations on dismatchless - and prices the highest in Bangkok.

A yard of printed silk fabric sells for the equivalent of U.S. $13.50; a ready-made cocktail dress averages $135, and a cotton day dress just under $60. In the men's department, a long-sleeved silk shirt is $52; one in cotton $35, and a silk or costs even further afield. There is also a lot of colored glass around, behooving shoppers to stick to outlets with solid, longstanding reputations and which provide certificates of authenticity. Like the award-winning The Lovers' at the Dusit Thani Hotel, a number of the best are found in the arcades of first-class horels. Tok Kwang jewelers is one of several which have been around for years.

Expect to pay between $110 and $230 per carat for a passable ruby, with the finest, Burma-mined ones beginning in the $3,800 range and soaring to $75,000 per carat. A super sapphire can be purchased for around $1,200 a carat.

Experts at Bangkok's National Museum estimate that as many as nine out of ten items sold at the city's anoique stores are fakes, with the antique dealers themselves often victims of some of the world's most skillful forgers. Furthermore, it is a rare dealer who will show his best pieces to anyone but a top collector. So unless one comes equipped with a vast knowledge of Thai, Burmese and Cambodian art history and is prepared to gamble large sums, a sound policy is to shun expensive antiques and go for the fake.

An "instant anoque" industry has mushroomed in recent years and the results --- in wood, ceramic, bronze and stone - are often of remarkable quality. More and more are being sold as reproductions and prices, naturally, are fractions of those for the real thing.

A final note of caution: check with the government's Fine Arts Department on rules for exporting anoques as well as Buddhist images of even recent vintage.

in Bangkok, the best place for both real antiques and reproductions is River City, a shopping plaza which has attracted more than 30 of the country's top dealers, including Gallerie d'Art, Neold Craft, Chaima and Sano's. The nearby Oriental Plaza is also recommended.

But the bargain hunter can do no better than travel to the lovely northern city of Chiang Mai, where many of the instant-antiques are made. Chiang Mai has a centuriesold tradition of fine craftsmanship and fathers still pass on to sons the innet magic of silver, niello, bronze, lacquer, celadon and wood.

Bangkok, of course, also offers numerous craft outlets. For hill tribe and lowland village handiwork of high quality, stop at one of several Chittalada stores, sponsored by Queen Sirikir, Bargaining is the rule in a variety of shopping situations - when putchasing jewelry (at even the most upmarket retailers), having clothes made, and in annique stores. But it is not practiced in department stores and places like Jim Thompson.

Bargaining is refined to an art in Thailand's open-air markets, where selling is invariably handled by wizened women with sharp tongues and a twinkle in their eyes.

Bangkok's markets, especially the mind-boggling Weekend Market, are best explored with a Thai speaker, especially when bargaining is called for (locals can extract better prices than foreigners). Nancy Chandler's annotated map of city markets is an excellent guide to a world of exotica and day-to-day life of the Thais. __T.V.M.

HIANG Mai - The best way to get introduced to this capital city of northern Thailand is to climb the 306 steps, or take the tramway, I to the Wat Phra That, the magnificent Buddhist temple on Doi Suthep mountain.

From this thousand-meter-high perch the visitor has a panoramic view of the town, its fertile valley and lush forests, as well as the surrounding mountains which form the lower ranges of the Himalayas. Looking another five kilometers up Doi Suthep, the visitor can see Bhubing Palace, the summer residence of King Bhumibol. The palace's elaborate gardens flower with roses, orchids, hibiscus and bougainvilleas.

Chiang Mai, founded in 1296 and once the capital of the kingdom of Lanna Thai (the Land of a Million Rice Fields), is one-fortieth the size of Bangkok, with a relatively moderate climate that provides a refreshing change from the often humid south. Those visiting Chiang Mai early next month will be in time for the city's annual flower festival (Feb. 6-8), featuring a spectacular floral float procession that depicts episodes from Thai mythology, legends and folk tales.

Another enjoyable day to drop in is April 13. This is Songkran, the traditional Thai New Year, marked by religious merit-making, parades and dancing throughout the country. It is traditional for celebrants to sprinkle scented water on their elders, monks and Buddha images as a gesture of veneration. But in Chiang Mai, where the new year falls in the middle of the dry season, Songkran celebrations are a hit more rambunctious than most, involving a substantial amount of water-throwing. Everyone gets wet.

This is somewhat out of character for the city: Chiang Mai and its population of 200,000 are usually well-ordered and quier. Although not quite the relaxed village of a dozen years ago, the moated city has a quiet beauty, with many northern-style temples daring from the 1300s.

It is extremely difficult not to go on a shopping binge in Chiang Mai. Prices for most items, including Burmese antiques and jade, are generally lower than in Bangkok and there is a wide range of locally made goods.

As always, it's wise to pay careful attendon while shopping ("Face it, there are a lot of future antiques for sale," admitted one salesperson). As a general policy, don't purchase anything without bartering the price down IO to 25 percent. There is not a profusion of hard sell, but shopkeepers in Chiang Mai are keen to make a deal, sometimes offering to meet prospective customers at the airport with a credit card machine to help influence lastminute purchasing decisions.

Chiang Mai is now Thailand's second major tourist destination and has the required facilioes, including a golf course at Lanna where the female caddies are distinguished by their bright orange apparel. There are numerous horels, like the Orchid and the Rincome, downrown, but many visitors prefer making the 45-minute drive to the Mac-Sa Valley Mountain Holiday Resort (Tel.: 053-251191, Telex: 82436) located amid thickly forested terrain. By staying in the valley one can more easily visit Meo tribal villages and an elephant camp with a daily show featuring the animals at work. There are only 4,000 working elephanes left in Thailand; another elephant camp is located in Chiang Dao. A short ride can be taken for $1, or a longer trek in the jungles can be arranged. There are also many colorful orchid nurseries, and the Sai Nam Phung Orchid Nursery sells bottled orchid seedlings ($8 for six planes) as well as the food and anti-fungus spray to help them grow. Although Chiang Mai is 13 hours by train and nine hours by bus from Bangkok (unol the late 1920s it could only be reached by an arduous river journey or an elephant tide of several weeks), it can be more easily reached by a one-hour airplane flight (round-trip fare from Bangkok, $93). One of the advantages of the latter is that near the airport, and behind the Old Chiang Mai Cultural Center (where the nightly Thai banquet and hill mibe show, with an elaborate presentation featuring the costumes and dances of the seven hill tribes native to the area, is well-worth attending) is the Rinkzew Phovech Ancient Massage where the masseuses practice the invigorating tradicional Thai massage ($8 an hour). "I take groups of foreigners for a massage after long bus trips in northern Thailand and they never want to leave," said one guide, Buakaew ("Betty") Thaiyai, who suggested that more adventurous travelers may want to visit Maw Hong Son near the Burma border, or Chiang Rai, near the 200,000scuare-kilometer Golden Triangle formed by the borders of Thailand, Laos and Burma In both places one can trek between villages of various hill tribes including the Meo, Lisu, Lahu, Yao, Akha, Lawa and Karen of Tibero-Burman origin - and in Chiang Rai there is an exciting trip on the Mekong River (and a chance to sample the renowned Mekong whiskey). Also worth a visit are the stunning temples in Lamphun as well as Thailand's highest mountain, waterfalls and wildlife in the Doi Inthanon National Park,

In fact, it's often true. The Thais love gambling, and much of it is done on and at athletic events. There are two horse race tracks in Bangkok, but the gambling extends far beyond - to beede fighting in Chiang Mai and kite fighting whenever the winds blow. However, it's generally agreed that the most moncy changes hands at the nightly Thai boxing matches in Bangkok.

Stock, Currency Worries Make the Market Cautious By CARL GEWIRTZ

International Herald Tribut ARIS - The wild gyrations of U.S. stock prices on Friday and the currency war waged by Washington against West Germany and Japan have laid a blanket of Gaution over the international capital market. The fallout from Wall Street's fireworks was already apparent on Friday, when the speculation and confusion in the stock market spilled over into the New York bond market and drove prices down and vields up.

Normally, stock and bond markets move in opposite directions, but the breadth of the speculative binge in the stock market added another negative, at least psychologically, to the concerns gnawing at confidence.

Rate cut did nothing to alter the view that the mark

will continue to

Jerry Goldstein, a director at Sanwa Bank in London, sums these up as "a weak dollar, a weak president, the prospect of Paul Volcker leaving the Fed, the lack of agreement strengthen. on exchange rates, the danger of a trade war and, for the United States, the likelihood of increased inflation resulting from higher oil prices and the depreciation of the dollar." Last week's half-point cut in the base interest rate, to 3 percent, by the Bundesbank did nothing to allay any of the international by the hundesbank did nothing to anay any of the international aspects of these worries. The cuts were regarded as too little, too late and largely neutralized by the central bank's liquidity-absorbing measures to have any effect on West Germany's economic growth prospects this year. The consensus is that West Germany will be lucky to eke out a

2 percent rate of growth, well below the government's target of 2.5 percent and far below the growth needed to enable the United States to reduce its colossal trade deficit.

Thus, the rate cuts, like the earlier revaluation against the other major European currencies, did nothing to alter the view that the Deutsche mark will continue to strengthen against the dollar. As a result, speculators who have moved into the mark remained there. There was some moderate profit-taking in the domestic bond market last week, but prices on Euro-DM bonds actually rose a fraction.

A LTHOUGH JAPAN is widely expected to reduce its interest rates again this week, the move is already largely discount-ed in the market and, as with West Germany, is not expected to produce any fundamental change in Japan's growth Drospects.

The United States is prodding both countries to speed up growth to deflect more of their production to the home market, as well as to increase their volume of imports. Without such a boost in world trade and a reduction in its own deficit, Washington argues, it will be unable to resist domestic pressure to reduce the imbalance through trade restrictions, which would raise the prospect of a trade war.

For the past year, the U.S. Treasury secretary, James A. Baker 3d, has been warning that the deficit will be cut come what may, if not through increased world trade then through a steadily declining value of the dollar,

According to Morgan Guaranty Trust's senior economist, Rimmer de Vries, in order to reduce the current $170 billion U.S. trade deficit to a more manageable level of around $70 billion by the end of 1988, Japan needs to be expanding at an annual rate of about 3.5 percent and West Germany by about 3 percent. Even at those rates of growth, he estimates that the U.S. deficit target could only be reached if the dollar shed another 10 percent or so from current levels, to a rate of 125 yen and 1.60 DM. If Japanese and West German growth is slower, the dollar exchange rate would have to be even lower if the deficit target were unchanged.

The expectation is that the pain such exchange rates create for industry in Japan and West Germany will force those governments to adopt easier fiscal policies, which would boost domestic demand and spur growth. The danger is how far the dollar can fall without triggering an international loss of confidence in the currency. Foreign invesinternational loss of connicience in the currency. Forcing infects tors are needed not only to go on buying U.S. government securities to finance the huge federal deficit, but they must also continue to hold the paper they have already purchased. A loss of confidence that caused foreigners to dump the paper they currently hold would set off a major financial crisis, a concern that prompted Karl Otto Pöhl, president of the Bundes-institution was "flaving with fire" bank, to warn last week that Washington was "playing with fire" in driving the dollar down. Whether Japan and West Germany play the game the way Washington would like or whether, as many Europeans fear, the United States simply fans domestic inflation by dramatically increasing import prices remains to be seen. What is clear is that currency markets expect the dollar to continue to weaken. The bond market so far shows no sign of worrying about

Chip Makers and Pentagon Fear Firm's Demise By David E. Sanger New York Times Service

ANDOVER, Massachuseus -In a world as unforgiving of mis-takes as the microelectronics industry, most people would simply shrug it off if a high-tech equip-ment maker as small as GCA Corp. ceased to exist in the midst of the computer slump. But GCA's problems, instead, have prompted concern at IBM, talk in California's Silicon Valley about the surrender of another industry to the Japanese, and warnings from the Pentagon and the Central Intelligence Agency about threats to national security. GCA is among the last Ameri-can makers of "wafer steppers" - the centerpiece of every semi-conductor production line. The machines are million-dollar optical devices that expose the pattern of circuitry on silicon chips, aligning each layer of gates and transistors within a hundredthousandth of an inch.

The technology, pioneered by GCA in the late 1970s, lay at the core of the United States' former dominance in the chip field. Now with the U.S. chip industry al-ready half-crippled, many say the United States is becoming heavi-ly dependent on its international devices. It's simply something we can't lose, or we will find our-selves completely dependent on competitors for the machines necessary to remain on the leading edge of technology.

"It's very, very critical," said Donald Latham, the assistant secretary of defense for command, control and communica-

Giants, Broncos Clash in Top U.S. Showcase

The oddsmakers favored another rout, New York was a nine to nine and one-half point. favorite, a one-sided spread that had inspired as much as $75 million in legal bets and countless millions more in illegal wagering. The Giants, a 62-year-old franchise in a 66ear-old league, were making their first trip to the Super Bowl, and trying to repeat the feat of last year's champion, the Chicago Bears, by winning the crown on their initial try.

"As soon as we got here we had what may have been one of the four or five toughest practices we've had all year," said center Bari Oates. "Nobody liked it. But we've got to get ready to play a game. We know why we're here

There was, however, the familiar problem of a team becoming so worked up with the anticipation that there was nothing left by Sunday.

"The anticipation is great," Reeves had said. "The batterflies are great. But when you finally kick it off it boils down to the fact that it is just another game. You still have to execute proper-ly to win. The chief difference is that there are more people watching than normal."

The Giants had been made an overwhelming favorite for the same reason the Bears were a year ago: their defense had been playing at a level above any other in football.

"Their defense has a great reputation," said Denver quarterback John Elway, who would be the chief subject of the Giants' attention." But I am not intimidated by them at all. I wouldn't say it's scary. No one gives us much of a chance, which is fine. If we play our game, we can beat

The Giznts, however, had not allowed other teams to play their game. They brought a 16-2 record into the contest, as well as an 11-game winning streak. One of those victories was a 19-16 deleat of the Broncos in the season's 12th week, a game decided by Raul Allegre's field goal with aix seconds to play.

Their defense had sacked the opposing quarterbacks 59 times - 10 more than the Bronco defense had - and limited opposition backs to

He had thrown a 48-yard touchdown pass to Vance Johnson for a 22-17 divisional round victory over the New England Patriots, then provided enough heroics in the American Conference title game against the Cleveland Browns to last Bronco fans for many a winter. the fourth quarter, then directed a march in overtime that produced the winning field goal "A whole lot of attention has been focused on Elway," said Harry Carson, one of the feared Giant linebackers. "But he doesn't make the team go by himself. He has a lot of weap- #

Overahadowed in pregame analysis was the other chief matchup: New York's offense, quarterbacked by Phil Simms, against the Den-ver defense, keyed by linebacker Karl Mecklenburg and end Rulon Jones.

In their previous meeting, the Giants could not produce an offensive touchdown. "As far as I'm concerned," Simms said, "I'm the underdog against those guys." This Super Bowl also appeared to have marked a turning point in the NFL. Six fran-chises had won 15 of the previous 20 Super Bowls: Green Bay, Miami, Dallas, Pittsburgh; San Francisco and the Oakland-Los Angeles Raiders. Only one of those teams made the playoffs this year, San Francisco, and it was overwhelmed by the Giants.

The Giants, under the coaching of Bill Parcells, had risen from two decades of despair. "I think of those old days as the Dark Ages," said defensive end George Martin, a 12-year / in their regular season game against the Bron-cos, on a 78-yard interception return.

"At times, we were a dismal bunch of individuals. There were certainly times when .1 didn't think something like this would ever happen to us. I'm just glad I lasted long enough

The oddsmakers favored another rout. New York was a nine to nine and one-half point favorite, a one-sided spread that had inspired as much as $75 million in legal bets and countless millions more in illegal wagering. The Giants, a 62-year-old franchise in a 66-

There was, however, the familiar problem of a team becoming so worked up with the antici-pation that there was nothing left by Sunday.

"The anticipation is great," Reeves had said. "The butterflies are great. But when you finally kick it off it boils down to the fact that it is just another game. You still have to execute properly to win. The chief difference is that there are more people watching than normal."

The Giants had been made an overwhelming favorite for the same reason the Bears were a year ago; their defense had been playing at a level above any other in football.

"Their defense has a great reputation," said Denver quarterback John Elway, who would be the chief subject of the Giants' attention. "But I am not intimidated by them at all. I wouldn't say it's scary. No one gives us much of a chance, which is fine. If we play our game, we can beat

The Giants, however, had not allowed other teams to play their game. They brought a 16-2 record into the contest, as well as an H-game winning streak. 'Cuppies' Enliven Pre-Final Scene ton Post Service Washington Pass Service FREMANTLE, Australia — As the series for sailing's top prize draws oear, the streets of Fremantle are crowded with members of the international vachting set.

They wear zinc on their noses, sunglasses on strings around their necks, Canterbury shirts, Pat

agonia shorts and Topsider shoes. In the old days, they might have been called Racer Chasers. In the spirit of the '80s, they are, of course, cuppies. Ο

Should Dennis Conner win the America's Cup and bring it back to the United States, it will be worth a fortune to the next host city.

A committee at Conner's San Diego Yacht Club can award the event to any city or town it wants, and indications are San Diego itself is only one of many sites in the running. Others are Honolulu, San Francisco, Santa Cruz, California, and New port, Rhode Island, where it was held until 1983.

Conner says the decision, in part, will be based on who wants it most, and Rhode Island got the jump last week with a full-page ad in the local West Australian newspaper.

The ad depicts an American with a camera around his neck, and says, "Relax, Fremantle, soon all those irritating tourists will be gone." It says Conner will win and it is signed, "Rhode Island, where the America's Cup belongs."

Some clever Stars & Stripes crewmen, including tactician Tom Whidden and sailing coach Robert Hopkins, brought their bank accounts with them when they came here in August and stuck the money in local banks, where the interest rate is 15 percent. Now they're crowing about the U.S. dollar's decline, because they get to turn the money back in for cheaper American currency. But when do you make the change? Whidden told Hopkins the other day they'd better do it around Feb. 1. He's convinced the Australian dollar will decline again "when we win the cup back."

When Kevin Parry's Kookaburra camp won the right to defend the cup from local hero Alan Bond last week, it should have been a great moment for Parry. But the oewspapers the next day carried front-page banner headlines about Bond and pictures of him beaming, because that day he closed a $1 billion deal to buy a television and radio net-work, his biggest business deal ever.

The timing relegated Parry's cup victory to sec-ondary status. Some observers think that's why Parry lashed out at Bond publicly that night, calling him spiteful and a bad loser.

Whatever the reason, it won Parry few friends. Radio shows the next day were inundated with calls backing Bond, and Parry had to launch a public-relations offensive to get back into his countrymen's good graces.

Bond, incidentally, disclosed that he has sold his two 12-meter yachts, Australia III and IV, to Japanese interests who will mount a cup campaign in 1990. The deal reportedly includes boats, rigs, data and an instruction menual.

Summer in the Southern Hemisphere is at a peak. The weather in Fremantle is predictable --hot mornings, with a breeze from the east (off the desert), then cooler, windy afternoons, with a sea breeze barreling in off the Indian Ocean.

The wind dominates life. If you want to go for a swim, you go in the morning, before the sea breeze starts, or risk sandburn as well as sunburn.

The wind peaks around dusk, when a good gust knocks your bicycle over and rattles the roof2 on tin sheds. The evening tempest is a nuisance, making sunset-watching almost impossible.

But last week Cyclone Connie was rumbling around in the tropical north, upsetting normal weather patterns. For the first time in months, the evenings were warm, gentle and calm.

We took the kids up to Cottesloe Beach, where a playground on the bluffs overlooks the ocean, bought them ice cream, turned them loose and sat staring west at the setting sun, which at the moment was baking the desert in Africa and beginning to light the day in Rio de Janeiro.

But it is Zurbriggen who is set to be the big star over the next two weeks - just as he was at the 1985 world championships, where he won two gold medals and a silver. "Zurbriggen is unbeatable at the

momeot," admitted Austriao Leonard Stock, the 1980 Olympic downhill champion. "He's skiing

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE, MONDAY, JANUARY 26, 1987

Zou Dehua: A Beijing Opera Saga

By Charles D. Sherman International Herald Tribune BELING - Zou Dehua can turn a Mongolian hot pot lunch into a command performance The Juilliard-trained coloratura, a long-time principal singer at Beijing's Central Opera Theater and now a casting director for the opera, finds center stage - wherever it is - comfortable.

Zou keens five luncheon guests stocked with slivers of mutton, wads of parboiled cabbage and . mounds of cellophane noodles, dredging them from the boiling water in the copper hot pot.

Between servings, she talks about a life and career that gives a new definition in the ups and downs normally associated with the pursuit of the arts. "I had 17 good years," Zon says. They included leading roles in "Figaro," "La Traviata" and many others. But in 1966 the music stopped. Red Guards, foot soldiers in Mao's Cultural Revolution, ordered her off the stage, out of the capital and into the oce paddies to learn from the peasants. "Then I lost my 10 best years," she said. She relishes talking about the good times, of the 1950s and early '60s when she was cast as a "daughter of the revolution" in such socialist epics as "Song of the Grasslands." Over the last three months, Zou has been auditioning actors and singers for something different: spring pro-ductions of "The Music Man" and "The Fantastiks," U.S.-Chinese collaborations that Zou is promoting.

The two shows, she says, suit the talent in China where singers do not usually dance and dancers rarely sing. She is back doing what she loves, hut she cannot forget that the biggest event between the "Grasslands" and the "Music Man" was the Cultural Revolution.

Her background made her an easy target for the charges of being a bourgeois intellectual and rightist,

Born in 1926, Zou spent a privileged childhood in cosmopolitan Shanghai, Her grandfather was a wealthy landholder; her father, a Cornell University graduate, was an agricultural specialist who later went into banking. She learned Western singing techniques from a teacher Shanghai's community of White Russians. Later when the Communists appeared ready to grasp power in China, Zou's father took a joh with the Food and Agriculture Organization. With his wife, four daughters and two sons, he left for New York. From 1946 to 1950, Zou studand two young sisters home.

over in 1949, my feeling was 'a oew China is born," she said, "It was just like that." Married to an economist,

Wang Zengzhuang, who had finished his doctoral studies at the tioo that we were graduates from University of Minnesota, Zou and her husband wanted to contribute to rebuilding their homeland. They did not know much she had no contact with the sister who had chosen the United about Marxism or Maoism, but they thought they had talent and

"We didn't dare mentry with his Cultural Revolution. One of 80,000 people in Beijing who were forced into the country-American schools," Zon said. From 1951 until 1971, when side, Zou spent two and half years U.S.-Chinese relations relaxed, planting and harvesting rice. Her husband and daughter were sent to a tea plantation.

When she was finally able to return to Beijing, bureaucrats charged with cultural activities ostracized her. The authorities only permitted performances of 10 operas during the decade of the Cultural Revolution.

No roles were deemed fit for a Western-trained prima doma. Today things are different. She lives in a two-bedroom, government-supplied apartment (rent $2 a month). Her home is a few minutes walk from work at the opera where she helps train a new generation of talent.

She has traveled to Europe and to United States several times since 1976, mainly in see her daughter, who was graduated from Wellesley College last year and who is now attending Harvard Law School.

Her hushand was assigned from 1980 to 1984 to the United Nations secretariat, giving her a chance to see her family in the United States and renew old friendships.

When she returns to New York, Beverly Sills will give her a handful of tickets for dress rehearsals at the Metropolitan Opera House. Zon had escorted Sills during the U.S. star's visit to China several years ago.

There is Premier Zhou, the theater's main patron, applanding the smiling prince. There is Zou in the foreground as a senior member of the opera. And nearby her in Jiang Qing, Mao's wife, a former actress, member of the infa-mous "Gang of Four," and chief harridan of the Cultural Revolution. For her role in instigating the turmoil, she was arrested after Mao's death in 1976 and tried. Jiang's death sentence was commuted to life imprisonment.

Zou smiled at the photo, happy to be where she is and to know where Jiang is. "It's been compli-cated," she said.

LANGUAGE Findings on a Presidential Finding

By William Safire WASHINGTON — Gerunds everywhere are proud that one of their clan has made it big m Washington: a finding, capitalized when used by the National Security Council staff, is the noun that enables a president secretly to suspend a law.

(A gerund, called by stiffs a "verbal substantive, a term in grammar that is forgotten as soon as it is learned. It means "a noun that is formed from a verb and ends in -ing"; in the sentence, Ducking a question is easy, the gerund is ducking. In addition, when you hold a witness' head under water, you are giving him a good gerundy ducking: however, when the same word is used as an adjective, it is not a gerund but a participle: "the bobbing, weaving, ducking adviser took the Fifth.")

"I hereby find that the following operation . . important," goes the once-secret document signed hy President Reagan on Jan. 17, 1986, "and direct the director of central intelligence to refrain from report-ing this Finding to the Congress." In that sentence, ding is a gerund, and that nonn is dear to executives because it has since 1859 had a judicial connotation: "The result of a judicial examination or inquiry; the verdict of a jury, the decision of a judge or arbitrator." In this case, the National Security Act of 1947 lets the president act as judge of when to obey a law. A shoemaker, holding tacks grimly between clenched lips, will wonder what all the brouhaha is about — to that person, findings are the small parts and materials other than leather used to make a shoe (laces, nails, huckles, etc.) — but a secret finding is hot stuff to congressmen planning televised hearings. (In the sentence, The president turned off his hearing aid when the hearings came on the screen, the adjective hearing is a participle because it modifies aid, and the noun hearings is a gerund.) The White House, press office decided it would be wiser not to withhold the president's finding on Iran arms sales, because it is better to look naïve than to look crooked. As a result, we have a document and its attachments that contains what were until recently the most closely guarded words in our government. This department will now analyze that document. This "Because of the requirement in U.S. law for recipients of U.S. arms to notify the U.S. government of transfers to third countries," wrote John M. Poindexter, then na-tional security adviser, "I do not recommend that you agree with the specific details of the Israeli plan." His prepositional phrase beginning because of and ending with the comma, which gives his reason for the recommended action, would better be placed after that recommendation because it seems now to be directed toward the "T" instead of the action.

"It is their belief that by so doing they can achieve a heretofore unobtainable penetration of the Iranian governing hierarchy," In that sentence, unobtainable is the wrong modifier for penetration. The action desired is the accomplishment, or achievement, of penetration, not the obtaining of it; therefore, the phrase should be "a heretofore unartainable penetration," If the writer (Lieutenant Colonel Oliver L. North, who drafted the document for Poindexter) wanted to put the sentence in plain English, be would have written, "They believe that is how they can penetrate the Iranian governing hierarchy for the first time."

"In that we have been unable to exercise any suggions over Hezballah." Although in that is not slang, it is a weak and awkward way to avoid the use of because It . is akin to beginning a sentence with Sering as how ing the provider[s] to coercively influence near term events." That coercively is one word too many, the phrase would better be left with its infinitive unsplit phrase would better be tell with its animitive unsplit because it is possible simply "to influence events," near-term or otherwise. The verb correct means "to force or compel"; coercively, the usually pejorative adverb, is probably intended here to mean "more that strongly"; however, the "force" meaning of the adverb coercively overpowers rather than modifies the sly werb influence.

If the writer's intent was to emphasize in then strongly to influence or forcefully to influence would have been a more puissant intensitier, because forcefully does the job without meaning "using force." However, if the Northdexter intent was well beyond influence, the drafter should have used a verb such as determine or dictate. "The Secretaries do not recommend you proceed with this plan." This is a confusing or deceptive construction. Does it mean that the secretaries (of state and defense) do not have a recommendation? In that we now know (see how weak in that is?) that Secretaries George P. Shultz and Caspar W. Weinberger vigorom-ty opposed the plan, that line should have read. "The secretaries recommend that you do not proceed with this plan." The misplacement of the do not was inadvertently or intentionally misleading.

HAT sort of sloppy writing would ordinarily cause most citizens to be incensed at the disservice done the president, but it turns out he didn't read if anyway. In a handwritten notation on the appendix to the Finding, Poindexter wrote: "President was briefed verbally from this paper."

verbally from this paper." Which raises the question: does verbally still mean "by use of words, either spoken or written," or has it come to mean "orally"? My long-held position is that usage has changed verbal to mean exclusively and, bue prescriptivists of the stature of Jacques Barzan and John Simon strongly (though certainly not coercively). disagree.

The last time I verbalized in print on this subject the biologist Lawrence P. Kunstadt of New York City put in this objection: "Many communications in the animal world are made orally, by mouth. All starts of animals grunt, howl, chirp, bray or otherwise vocaling through their buccal cavities. Even ants communicate orally, through mutual feeding by regargitation, a behavior known as trophallaxis, which functions in part to communicate information concerning the colooy. Only one species of animal communicates verbally, with words.

That is as good a case as I have read for using verbat to mean "communicate with words," but I would have to side with John Poindexter in his use of verbally; his point would have been clearer if he had written "oral; ly," but most people today take verbally to be its synooym. Purisis will hate it, but that's my friding, ? New York Tunes Service
